APPLICATION REVIEW GUIDELINES

1. Please review the application for correctness, accuracy, and to make sure that no important details or aspects have been omitted.
2. Feel free to make [changes or comments enclosed in square brackets] directly in the written description and return a renamed version to us.
3. Because it is not possible to supplement the disclosure (i.e., add "new matter") to the application once the application has been filed, it is important to ensure that the disclosure is as complete as possible.
4. U.S. patent laws require that a patent application describe the invention and the methodology for making and using it, completely and accurately such that a person who has an ordinary amount of skill in the technology pertaining to this invention could, after reviewing the application, make and use the invention. If the application would not permit such persons of ordinary skill to make and use the invention without undue experimentation, please let us know.
5. The patent laws additionally require that the application set forth the preferred implementation or "best mode" of carrying out the invention. If, at this time, you know of a better way to make or use the invention than that which is described in the application, please let us know.

DUTY OF DISCLOSURE

Patent applicants and their attorneys have an obligation, throughout the pendency of an application, to advise the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office (USPTO) of prior art that they know of or become aware of. Failure to make a full disclosure of prior art may seriously jeopardize the validity of any patent that might issue.

Prior art includes publications, public uses, public disclosures, and offers for sale that:

- (a) involve the invention or share a significant common concept or feature with the invention; and
- (b) existed before conception of the invention by the inventors or existed more than one year prior to the filing of the patent application.

Prior art can include the prior activities of your own company such as releases, public uses, or offers for sale occurring more than one year prior to the filing date of the application.

Please bring to our attention any prior art that you are aware of, or become aware of, so that we can file it with the USPTO.

We would appreciate your response, or an indication that you know of no prior art, as soon as possible.
